

We want to ensure that those planning to visit San Antonio have the most current information about gasoline availability in Texas.

The Texas Railroad Commission has publicly announced that there is no shortage of gasoline in the state. In fact, there are 230 million barrels of gas in the nation's inventory. Commission Chair Christi Craddick and Commissioner Ryan Sitton have asked the public to stay calm and not perpetuate rumors of a gas shortage.

The situation is a result of many gas stations running out of gas due to increased demand from people preparing for an emergency and subsequent logistical issues for stations waiting to be refilled. This is then amplifying a sense of public panic spreading through social media.

At this point, it is a matter of getting gas to the stations. Gas will be resupplied over the next few days, and the matter should be resolved soon.

Visit San Antonio will continue to monitor the situation closely, and post updates as needed on VisitSanAntonio.com.